Showcasing the Best of New England

Wow, how late am I! By now the BoNE Show is more than a month old and winners are starting to move their Bone from their desk onto shelves and into cabinets. Last week I worked on dismantling the exhibit which ended up being a very painful process. Today I've finally come to grips with reality and ready to share some thoughts on the experience.

Joining the team was the easiest I've ever seen. After all it was a volunteer team but I've tried to volunteer for other organizations and met with membership fees and lack of organization. In this case I was emailed a meeting schedule and quickly given responsibility. The team was great, by now everyone on the team knows they did a great job. Beyond this, I would personally like express my gratitude for being given the opportunity to work side by side with you guys. I look forward to doing it again.

The best part about this whole experience is getting exposed to the inner workings of a design exhibit. The install phase (the only phase I worked on) was a lot of work. From detailed drawings to generating the "found materials" used to create the exhibit.

Highlights

Hardest Part: Breaking apart the wood pallets used to make the display system.

Mishaps: Spilling a cup of green paint on the white wall

Favorite meal: BBQ chicken pizza and Corona (every night)

First For me: Using a glue gun

How can we make it better: move the ceremony upstairs.
